WIFE ADMITS SHE TRIED SUICIDE BY DRINKING IODINE

Mrs. Mary Rutherford, 22, of Doylestown, Says She Could Not Agree With Husband

MARRIED FIVE MONTHS

Husband Said She Wanted Him to Go Out Every Night

DOYLESTOWN, Apr. 2—A young wife, Mrs. Mary Rutherford, 22, of Doylestown, told President Judge Hiram H. Keller in Quarter Sessions Court of Bucks County yesterday that she tried to take her own life by drinking iodine because her husband and she could not get along as they had planned while they courted for eight years.

The defendant was W. Earl Rutherford, 24, who conducts a general freight trucking business between Doylestown and Philadelphia. He was married to his wife Mary on September 26, 1934, and they separated in January, 1935.

Mrs. Rutherford told Judge Keller that they at first decided to keep the marriage a secret until her husband was injured in an automobile accident and it was then that she asked to go to his home in Doylestown to be near him while he was recovering from his injuries.

The young bride, who said that she was employed as a part-time clerk in a Doylestown department store, testified that after she saw things were not going right, that she became discouraged and tried to end her life. She admitted that she wrote one or two notes on other occasions, threatening suicide.

Mrs. Rutherford testified that she had received but $10 support money from her husband from the time they were married until they separated, and that she bought her own clothes. She said her husband came to see her once in Lansdale after she had tried to end her life, but that at that time he made no offer to take her back. She is living with a sister in Lansdale now.

Rutherford, on the witness stand, denied in answer to a question asked by Mrs. Rutherford's attorney, Robert G. Hendricks, that he had intended going to Reno to get a divorce, but admitted that he had looked into the advisability of doing such a thing. He said that his wife continually nagged him at night and that she always wanted to go to the movies, or to visit their relatives. He said that he was tired after hauling freight all day and rather than get into a squabble with her, he would tell her that he was going out at night to fix cars in a nearby garage. Rutherford said that his wife left four or five notes in the house, threatening suicide. He said that she accused him of not loving her and that the accusation was not true.

When asked whether she would go back and live with her husband if they moved away from his parents, Mrs. Rutherford said that she did not believe that she would go back. Rutherford, too, in answer to a question, admitted that he stated to his attorney, John L. DuBois, of Doylestown, that he would not live with his wife again. Mr. DuBois informed the Court that he believed the whole affair could be fixed up. His client denied that he was living all his money to his parents.

Judge Keller said that he felt that the two young people should patch up their differences and get together. He said that he held them both partly to blame and that he would give Rutherford until May 6 to see what can be done.

"I hope that you will take the hint before that time," Judge Keller reminded Rutherford. "You should get together."

THREE SUITS RESULT OF LANGHORNE ACCIDENT

Joint Damages Asked Total $145,600, and Involve Seven Persons

FIVE LAWYERS ENGAGED

TRENTON, N. J., Apr. 2—A peculiar trial is being conducted in the Mercer Circuit Court here as the result of an accident which occurred on the Lincoln Highway, near Langhorne, Pa. It is a complicated trial involving three suits, seven persons, a bottling company, $145,600 in damages, unusual injuries and five lawyers. Judge Oliphant is on the bench.

Three suits are being tried jointly, with the damage claim totaling $145,600. They arose out of an accident on the Lincoln Highway near Langhorne, in January, 1934, in which two young women were seriously, yet peculiarly, hurt in a two-car collision.

Five lawyers are taking part in the litigation, complicating the task for the jury. At the outset, some difficulty arose over the procedure in challenging jurors because of clashing interests.

Samuel D. Lenox, as counsel for Miss Anna Delaney, 18, of 100 Walnut avenue, described how she was pinned under a car and suffered a fracture of the sphenoid bone inside the skull. The result was the loss of sight in her right eye, impaired hearing and the lack of feeling on the entire right side of her head and neck. Her father, Thomas Delaney, is seeking to recover for the cost of her treatment. Their claims total $85,000.

In addition, Miss Margaret McGinley, 19, of 783 East State Street, and her father, Edward A. McGinley, seek damages, their claims totaling $40,000. Miss McGinley sustained a fracture of the pelvis and lesser injuries.

The McGinleys and Delaneys are suing Abe Silvers, who was driving a car owned by the New Jersey Bottling Company, of this city, a co-defendant, and Frank C. Rubury, of Wharton, N. J., operator of a second car involved in the crash-up.

In a third suit, the bottling company, as well as Silvers and Jennie Silvers, is seeking to recover damages from Rubury. It is contended that the last named was injured internally, while Abe Silvers is seeking compensation for the expense caused and the bottling company is asking to be reimbursed for the damage to its vehicle. The accident, as described by opposing counsel, occurred under unusual circumstances. The cars driven by Silvers and Rubury were proceeding in the same direction, with Silvers alleged to have been occupying a lane farther to the right and slightly to the rear of Rubury.

One version of the mishap is that Silvers attempted to pass on the right side, swerved left and the cars side-swiped. Another view is that Rubury attempted to move over to the right lane. Both drivers deny negligence.

Counsel, in addition to Lenox, include James J. McGooagan, George Gildea, Irving H. Lewis and Crawford Jamieson.

Hold Woman in Bail On Charge of Having Liquor

Chief of Police Jones and Officer Nichols raided the Riggio residence on March 21st and state they found Mrs. Riggio in the cellar filling whiskey bottles with moonshine. Chief Jones presented results of chemist's analysis of the beverage taken from the Riggio residence at the time of the raid.

PENNSYLVANIA POLICE FIND NEW "TRUTH SERUM" AIDS IN SOLVING YEAR-OLD CRIME

State Troopers Adopt Use of Scopolamine Officially

By John W. Scotzin
(I. N. S. Staff Correspondent)

HARRISBURG, Apr. 2—(INS)—Dispensing with the old-time "third degree" tactics, the Pennsylvania State Police have accepted a product of modern science to shatter the underworld's traditional code of silence.

The innovation is "truth serum," known by its scientific name as scopolamine. Injected into the arm, the serum causes the subject to slip into a coma. Thought is hindered; extended imagination or fabrication becomes difficult, and the patient unconsciously answers all questions truthfully. The State police have thus given official recognition to a scientific aid to crime detection which other police forces have been slow to adopt.

"The so-called 'truth serum' depresses the cerebrum to such a degree as to destroy the power of reasoning," Maj. Lynn G. Adams, superintendent, explained. "Events stored in the cerebrum such as memory can be released by direct stimulation of the center of hearing."

"Truth serum" will be employed at every opportunity, Major Adams said, but under present laws it use requires the consent of the suspect. Under the present rules of evidence, he pointed out, a confession obtained in this manner is not legal. However, a refusal to permit its use would indicate to the State police they were on the right track in their investigation and a conviction could be obtained by other means, he said.

The use of "truth serum" was begun when two men were taken into custody at Bellefonte in connection with the death of a man there a year ago. Believed at first the result of an accident, the case was reopened on a belated theory of foul play.

One of the suspects readily consented to undergo the experiment. As he lapsed into semi-unconsciousness following the injection, State police unleashed a barrage of questions. In a thickened voice, the man answered all questions slowly and in a monotone. His answers convinced the police of his innocence and he and his companion were released.

"Under the influence of scopolamine there is no imagination," Major Adams said. "The subject cannot create a lie because he has no more power to think or reason than if he was under the influence of gas, chloroform or ether."

Thus, he pointed out, the use of "truth serum" offers the innocent man, enmeshed in a chain of circumstantial evidence, a speedy method of exonerating himself. The guilty person is usually unwilling to submit himself to the test and as a result strengthens suspicion against himself, he said.

Major Adams said he became convinced of the potentialities in scopolamine as a crime-fighting weapon after one of his troopers took a course of study in the serum and submitted himself to the experiment. Before taking the test, the trooper unknown to his fellow-officers, "stole" a number of personal articles from them. Although determined not to "talk" while under the influence of the drug, the subject's "deprecations" were disclosed in answer to questions. Regaining consciousness, the trooper was unaware of what had transpired.

HEARING ON BRIDGE REMOVAL IS HELD

Matter of Moving Span At Morrisville Now Rests With Commission

FIREMEN ARE KEPT BUSY

MORRISVILLE, Apr. 2—Another hearing on the removal of the canal bridge on the Lincoln Highway here was held before the Public Service Commission in Philadelphia and after all the testimony was offered, the case was left with the Commission for a decision. It is believed the entire matter rests on whether the Commission will permit a grade crossing here as a one track railroad spur now runs under the span and if the bridge is removed and the street put to grade it will mean that this spur must cross the highway at grade.

The hearing was on a complaint made some time ago by Councilman Elwood Kohl, who as a citizen, filed the protest because of the great danger here. Some weeks before a hearing was held on the borough's complaint when residents, borough officials and others testified.

A committee of the Chamber of Commerce headed by President Edgar T. Snipes visited the officials of the State Highway Department at Harrisburg a few days ago in an effort to have the highway officials go along and aid in having this death trap removed. It was stated that the only objection which stands in the way of making this improvement immediately is the fact that a grade crossing may be necessary and the State Highway Department is committed against grade crossings. Those who made the trip to Harrisburg aside from Mr. Snipes were William Burgess, Harry M. Lair, Charles H. Heller, William Hoheweller, Harry Watson, Fred Watson, Albert Hibbs.

Morrisville firemen have been busy with a series of small fires here but most of them have been grass fires. On Saturday afternoon the two companies were called to Woodland avenue where a field blaze threatened some of the homes there. A grass fire on the Bristol Pike threatened to spread to the Pennsylvania Railroad Nursery and the firemen had a hard battle here using brooms, the booster and hand tanks. Another brush fire on West Bridge street spread to a hedge and then sparks set fire to the roof of the home of George Kice, 330 West Bridge street, but was soon extinguished. Another fire occurred while old trolley cars were being burned on the Bristol Pike and the flames spread to an adjoining field.

Kills Man and Wife

Hershey, Apr. 2—Suddenly running amuck with a gun early today, a chocolate factory worker killed a man and his wife, wounded two other men and then quietly submitted to arrest.

The slayer, Queino Carlucci, 37, was being closely questioned by state police who sought the reason for his bloody rampage. The dead were: Amerio Giovannetti, 33, and his wife, Laura, 27. Giovannetti, shot through the chest was found under a kitchen stove. The nude body of his wife, her head battered in with the stock of a shotgun which the assailant grabbed from her husband, was found in the bathtub. Their 7 year old daughter, Mary, who fled from the house, was uninjured. Octavio Tace was shot through the abdomen and neck as he passed the Giovannetti home. He was taken to the Hershey Hospital and then to the Harrisburg Hospital in a critical condition.

Basilio Martini, was grazed under the chin by a bullet as he sat facing his shoes on the doorstep of his home next to the Giovannetti residence. He was taken to state police barracks as a witness.

No charge was immediately lodged against Carlucci pending an investigation. Police said he told them an incoherent story of blackmail and a bootleg vendetta. He was also to be given a mental examination.

Fire Routs Occupants

PHILADELPHIA, April 2—A 10-year-old girl was critically burned and 15 persons overcome by smoke, and more than 40 residents of the neighborhood compelled to flee their homes in night attire when a four-story apartment building in the central part of this city was damaged by fire early today. While firemen fought for more than an hour to check the blaze, an invalid boy, 10-year-old Richard Mitchell, bed-ridden with a serious intestinal ailment, lay within the burning building. Doctors had warned that any attempt to move the boy might result in his death. Trapped in her bathroom by the flames, Mrs. Ann Devens, 19, living on the third floor where the fire originated, was taken to Jefferson Hospital, suffering from first degree burns. Despite her painful burns, the girl hung from a third story window ledge until two policemen rescued her.

REMOVAL OF POST OFFICE CAUSES DISSENTION

Cornwells Improvement Ass'n To Protest to Postmaster General Farley

SAY IT IS INADEQUATE

CORNWELLS HEIGHTS, Apr. 2—Vigorous protest was made last night at a meeting of the Cornwells Improvement Association over the moving of the post office. The post office has been moved from the building formerly occupied by the Cornwells State Bank into a building across the street. The new quarters are very small and according to the members of the Improvement Association are entirely inadequate to the needs of the community.

The Improvement Association met last night in the fire station of Cornwells Fire Company, No. 1, being presided over by H. Lincoln Hughes.

The meeting voted that a protest be sent to Postmaster General Farley at Washington requesting that an investigator be sent here to look into the matter. John Diamond informed the meeting that it had been a pride to show visitors the post office in the former bank building but that he would be ashamed to show anyone the new location.

The post office for a number of years was in the store of Ralph Simons. Then about January 1, 1934, it was moved across the street in the vacant bank building and now it is being moved back across the street into a vacant room, a part of the Simons property.

Another question which was much discussed was the eviction of three families from houses on the Traylorsville site. These families, it was reported had been on relief and that notice of eviction had been served upon them by the Carlton Company, owners of the wartime houses.

H. Lincoln Hughes was delegated to go to Harrisburg to interview the State Relief Administrator concerning the matter. Mr. Hughes announced that he will visit Harrisburg next Friday.

Mr. and Mrs. William Eisenfeld, Newark, N. J., passed the week-end at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. Gus Williams, 236 Wood street.

ASK HULMEVILLE COUNCIL TO TAKE OVER STREETS

Present Four Petitions On Part of Citizens Requesting Improvements

GIVE DAMAGE RELEASES

HULMEVILLE, Apr. 2—Petitions by which the dedication of four streets to Hulmeville borough is sought, were discussed at length at the April meeting of borough council in the council chambers last evening.

The matter was brought before the borough body for the second time in two months, and in view of the fact that many citizens from the section of the borough involved were in attendance, other business was waived by the councilmen, and this subject was the first discussed at last night's session. Council president Cyrus E. Smith was in the chair.

At the March meeting of council a committee had been appointed to go into the matter, the committees representing both the council body and the citizens group.

Last evening the chairman of the citizens' committee, George Tracy, presented the matter, informing council that the dedication petitions, one for each of the four streets involved, Ford, Reetz, Pennsylvania and Lincoln avenues, had been signed by more than 80 per cent of the property owners on the streets affected. There are but a few signatures yet to be secured. The petitions, he informed, had been drawn up by a lawyer, and one of the petitions was read to the gathering by council secretary, Thomas B. Longhurst.

The petitions as drawn up asking that Hulmeville borough take over the four streets mentioned, with the signatures of abutting property owners attached, relieve the borough from all liabilities in connection with improvement of streets. These petitions, it was stated could be kept on file by the borough body, to protect it from any or all claims for damages in the future. The papers as drawn up release the borough from any such damages.

With a separate petition for each of the four streets it was brought out that it will be necessary only to record four releases, thus saving legal costs. Mr. Tracy, in presenting the plan, stated that all the citizens of the territory involved are asking is that the borough council take over the streets, and then make them accessible. "We only ask for accessibility. We want to be able to get our automobiles into our garages, and make it possible for fire apparatus or ambulances to get to that section if necessary. . . . We're not asking for paved streets. We only ask that the streets be improved after borough takes them over." Then the council was informed as to the freight charges on carloads of cinders, and several residents stated they believed the cost of improving the four streets would be small in comparison to the benefits to the borough and the citizens as a whole.

One of the streets involved, Ford avenue, it was later brought out by the chairman of the citizens' committee, is on the borough plan, and has been a public thoroughfare since 1905.

"We don't ask that any big amount be spent on these streets," one of the citizens stated. "We only ask for fairly good streets." The conditions of the thoroughfares during the past few months were spoken of. Many automobiles

WE AND GERMANY

Strange as it may seem to some persons, reports have it that President Roosevelt's military advisers are telling him it is better to keep hands off the European situation while his diplomatic advisers are inclined to believe the United States should make some form of protest against German insistence on arming to the limit of its capacity. Doubtless this is explainable, however, on the theory that the military element looks upon the actualities while the diplomats have an academic view which is offended by deliberate violation of a contracted agreement.

If President Roosevelt will turn his ear to the country he will, we believe, find almost universal agreement that no action should be taken by the United States which can be construed as in any way adding to the acuteness of conditions abroad. He will search in vain for any sentiment for American participation in another European outbreak. He will find instead a deep conviction that at least in war a policy of complete isolation must be ours, and that nothing we do shall make us a party to whatever conflict may be forced upon Europe because of continental nationalistic ambitions, fears or resentments.

We set out once to make the "world safe for democracy." We spent and loaned many billions of dollars to that end. And the true democracy that was saved to the world is even less today than existed before the Great War. We got in return for our sacrifices nothing save a knowledge that it was all a mistake, the enmity of some of the associated nations, a repudiation of most of the debts owed us and participation in a world depression inevitably following a period of destruction of life and property such as had never been equalled in the history of mankind.

There can be no willingness here to repeat the experience. Even Europe must be awed by the possibilities—some will say the unscapable eventualities—which it now faces at close range and which exist because so-called statesmen have had neither the wisdom nor the honesty to put aside the old conceptions that peace is best promoted by building high the pedestal upon which Mars stands.

PLAYING WITH MATCHES

"Our desire for peace is backed up by several millions of steel bayonets," shouted Benito Mussolini, as he mobilized the army call of 1911.

Similarly, Russia in her desire for peace ordered the mobilization of her army in 1914, thereby causing Germany to mobilize her army and strike before the slower Russians were ready.

"Italy offers the world a spectacle of calm," continued Il Duce.

The calm before the storm? When little boys play with matches, their elders take the matches away from them. Ever since 1918, wise people have been trying to take the matches away from the little boys in government jobs, lest they start another such conflagration. We had thought better of Mussolini.

"More Money"

CHAPTER XXXVI

Jasper H. Ingram glanced at the headlines in the afternoon papers, which told the world about Arline's suit, and he no more than cocked an indifferent eyebrow. Yet, how short a while ago, even the threat of such a disclosure would have brought on a mental panic. How quickly he had been assimilated to blackmail, settled on any basis, rather than be held up to public scorn and ridicule.

How insignificant this affair was now, compared with the sensational news the morning papers would carry concerning the collapse of his great financial structure, the crash of his fortunes.

He wondered, though, if Laura, with her social consciousness, would be upset by Arline's suit more than by the loss of money and position. She would never know that she had precipitated this final debacle.

Probably most men who end their lives as ruin stare them in the face, do so in that first despairing moment when their case seems hopeless. Jasper Ingram's fighting spirit, his great lusty love of life, combined with the deep sense of obligation he had to his stock and bond holders, carried him through that dangerous moment.

Just now, however, Jasper Ingram was, above all else, conscious of an immense fatigue. He longed for rest. He longed to turn his mind from the infinite complications and ramifications of his business—to the ways of peace. To the paths of philosophy, art and letters.

In the left-hand drawer of his desk were some dozen steamship folders, which he dreamed over from time to time. He'd had few holidays in his strenuous, hard-fighting life. If he could escape from this turmoil! There were countries in which he could find sanctuary, with no fears of extradition or molestation; and many of these countries were places of great natural beauty and kind climates. Jasper Ingram saw himself basking in sunlight by blue waters, reading all the books he had never had time to read, relearning Latin, and exploring the classics; having the scores of all the operas sent him and studying them at leisure, playing them over on the piano. He fancied he might even have a try at painting. More than one middle-aged business man had sought self-expression with oils and canvas and had achieved surprising results.

Alternating with these anticipated delights, the peace of mind and freedom of this Capua, was a sterner concept—a call to arms to fight his way back. There was still a possibility of saving his business honor and his prestige. If he could secure his own appointment as receiver or joint receiver for his bankrupt enterprises, Jasper Ingram was certain he could make a better showing for his investors than anyone else. His dreams had been vast, but his scheme had been basically sound. The times, and other conditions beyond his control, had combined to defeat him. But only temporarily. He might even wind up a receivership with a sound structure and a going concern.

Could he force his enemies to give him that chance? To remain here and work and fight for this opportunity to redeem himself was to lose that other chance for peace and rest and freedom from worry.

Such an exile was so inviting, so infinitely desirable. Yet one other element that he had tried not to think about disturbed his contemplation of it.

Seward! How could he let the boy start life under such a cloud? What would be his prospects, with his own way to make, and with his father a deserter and his name a byword?

"Come in, come in!" cried Ingram.

"Seward, shut the door behind him. It's a damned outrage!" he gasped. "I've only just seen it, dad, or I'd have been here before."

Jasper Ingram didn't know at first what the boy was talking about. But there was that in his voice and manner which was warning him to the father. Then Ingram's face lighted up as he realized what his son was driving at.

"Oh, you're talking about the Martin girl and her suit!" smiled Jasper Ingram. "Yes, I saw the papers."

"Father, you don't know what I'd give to wipe out all I said to you about that girl. I made a fool of myself over her, but I wish to God I hadn't taken it out on you!" cried Seward.

"Well," said his father, "much of what you said was true enough. I haven't altogether led the sort of life most people consider good."

"But, go on," said Seward, "where do I get off, sitting in judgment on you?" His face reddened, but the constraint which he usually felt in his father's presence was gone. His exultation at having won Cathleen, his disappointment in his mother, and all the other emotions which so powerfully stirred him now, broke down the old inhibitions.

"I've behaved like a cheap moralist, but I've always known what a great guy you are, dad, and you needn't think I haven't been proud of you. From the time I was a little kid, when I just knew, from the way people spoke of you, how important you were, I've felt like that."

"I want to amount to something, too, dad. I've got a reason for that I'll tell you in a minute."

"But I want to work like hell with you, if I can be of any help."

"My dear boy," was all that Jasper Ingram could say. But with his right hand he gripped Seward's. Then he placed the other hand on the boy's shoulder—a firm, broad shoulder, onto which—perhaps—some part of a man's burden might be shifted.

He had been ready to surrender his sword, sick of the losing, lonely battle. But Jasper Ingram's heart took courage as he thought of turning back to that battle with his son at his side. Seward's expressions of love and faith instilled new life in him, new strength. It was as if he had never had a son before.

It was unthinkable, now, that Seward should have to learn not only of his father's failure and disgrace, but of his acknowledged guilt through an ignominious flight from the field of action and from the tribunals of justice.

Suddenly Jasper Ingram knew that he would be appointed receiver. The old certainty of his power to achieve descended upon him. And with that power he was—and would be—unconquerable.

Together they would win—he and Seward! Like an intricate scrawl of lightning across a murky sky, Jasper had a swift illuminating vision of what might be done to save himself and his investors.

He took a deep breath and squared his own shoulders. Then he smiled at Seward. "Son," he said, "I'm afraid you'll have to moderate your pride in your father, because tomorrow it's going to be a case of, 'How are the mighty fallen!' Why, that Arline Martin business is nothing at all."

"Tomorrow, hell starts popping. We'll have to go through with that. There's a big job ahead for us, and a mighty mean one, but now I'm confident we can pull out of it and keep the Ingram name clean."

"I'm not inviting you to any picnic, son, and I want you to come in, if you come, with your eyes open. I'd be more than glad to have you with me, but you're not responsible for this mess."

and his nostrils dilated as Jasper's own did when the fighting became hot. "When do we start?" he demanded.

"Good boy!" said Ingram.

His telephone buzzed. "Hello!" he said—"Oh, Laura—"

Seward was suddenly struck with consternation. He hadn't told his father of his engagement to Cathleen. Now he would learn of it in the way his mother would distort it.

But it was Arline's suit which was the burden on his mother's mind. She had read the news, and her hysterical indignation spilled out of the receiver in outcries that Seward could hear.

"Oh, that's of no importance whatever," said Ingram, in a voice level and soothing. "Simply a crude attempt at extortion. . . . Just plain blackmail. . . . No, I did not! No, most certainly not! . . . Is that all, my dear?"

But that was by no means all Laura Ingram had to say. Jasper's next exclamation was, "Engaged to be married?" and he looked up in quick surprise at his son. Seward suffered agony through the next few moments as his mother talked on. What if his father should side with her? What if he should become so angry that he no longer would want him in the office? Suppose, when he hung up the receiver, he should send for Cathleen, denounce her and then discharge her!

But Seward's heart jumped as he heard his father say, "Why, that's great, my dear! Best thing that's happened in the Ingram family in a long time. . . . Yes, of course I know her. . . . A fine girl. . . . A beautiful girl. . . . Much too good for him."

"Father. . . ."

Ingram replaced the receiver and swung around. "Is Miss McCarthy—Cathleen—here? Why don't you bring her in, stupid?"

"Father," cried Seward, "Father, I think you're swell."

When Seward had dashed off to get Cathleen, waiting in his car, Jasper H. Ingram sat back easily in his big chair, lighted a cigar and enjoyed a mental contentment he had not known for months.

This, he mused, was not the end. This was the beginning. A new start and a new deal. What a fool he'd been. He had driven himself within an ace of suicide in his mad pursuit of money. Every man with whom he'd been associated, or in conflict with, and many women, had the same crazy determination to get hold of money, and more money, beyond any reasonable need of it.

That poor devil of an Alspaugh could have lived in something like luxury on the salary he received, and the greater luxury because he had no responsibility and no risks. And he had ruined himself trying to get more than he needed.

It was that senseless lust in al. of us, Ingram reflected, that brought us to the pass we're in today—this idea that we must have more, always more and more—

And he himself had been one of the worst offenders. Where had his sense of proportion been all this time? He had begun life poor. He feared poverty. And he had risen above it. Yet he might be poor again. What would it matter? Money! More money! More than any man had need for. Too much for his own good. We rich men, he thought, have nearly wrecked our country because of our mad scramble for more money. Well, he for one, had seen the light. And he only hoped he could build again for a fresh start—

Seward opened the door, his face eager and happy. "Here she is, father!"

Jasper Ingram rose from his desk and went forward to meet them. He took Cathleen's shy blushing face between his hands and kissed her on the forehead. "We shall have real need of you," Cathleen said the next day. "Cathleen," said the great Jasper Ingram.

regulate the planting and sale of all agricultural products.

What is happening in the Southern States, Republican leaders hold, is bound to happen to Pennsylvania farmers if the Government gets a strangle-hold on Pennsylvania farms.

The Record in its report on the cotton share-croppers of Arkansas, typical of the entire South, says:

"Widespread starvation and virtual serfdom among Arkansas Share-croppers were described yesterday by two sharecroppers from that State.

"Not a single child of the sharecroppers has had a drop of milk in five months," Walter Moskop, a member of the Executive board of the Sharecroppers' Union, told students at Swarthmore College.

"I saw the mother of four children, one of whom she was trying to nurse, die of hunger. Other mothers of large families are forced to crawl through mud to pick radishes at two cents a hundred bunches to keep their children in pitifully small rations."

"Moskop told of one family whose diet consisted of a five-cent package of crackers and a nine-cent jar of peanut butter.

"Hundreds are starving in this Eastern Arkansas area," he declared. "And it has the richest soil in the world."

Thousands of cotton share-croppers in all parts of the South have been forced into idleness by the government's cotton regulations.

Making His Annual Comeback

By BURNLEY

Back to the golfing wars once again after his disastrous comeback in last year's Masters' Tourney, the once invincible Robert Tyre Jones will try to flash some of his old golfing legerdemain in the second edition of his own tournament at Augusta, Ga.

This highly publicized event, in which the greatest of all golfers makes his one competitive appearance of the year, has drawn a colorful and formidable field of contenders, with the 1934 victor, Horton Smith, on hand to defend his laurels.

The "youth movement" in golf, meaning the younger contingent of sharpshooters who have been leading the veterans a merry chase, will be represented by "Jug" McSpaden, Henry Picard and others.

None of these kids has any awe of the great Jones, since all have come to the fore since his retirement, and they would like nothing better than to demonstrate to Mr. Jones that he is merely a hollow shell in the fast golfing circles of today.

Our pal "Rubber Tyre" may glean a little encouragement from the recent tournament victory scored by Walter Hagen, one of the grand old men of golf. The Haig flashed all his old wizardry, and for that brief period showed the young upstarts a thing or three about the royal and ancient game.

While in Florida a couple of weeks ago, I ran into Hagen rather unexpectedly at a quiet little fishing resort near Miami. Sir Walter was looking as well as I've ever seen him, sporting his usual deep bronze sun-tan, and with all his old insouciant nonchalance.

Hagen's trouble in the past few years has been the putting jitters—the rest of his game is as flawlessly perfect as it was in the heyday of his golfing glory. During the course of his recent triumph, however, Walter sunk one forty-five foot putt that must have done his heart good.

If they are on their games, Hagen, Jones, Armour, MacSmith and the rest of the old guard will give the youngsters plenty to worry about.

A GOOD WIFE
Heaven's Gift to Man
EVANGELIST JOHN MOSES BAKER
Baltimore, Maryland

There is nothing on earth that we cherish,
And nothing a husband loves more,
Than the wife that was given to help him,
And save in temptations so sore.

When trials and conflict surround him,
She then is his comfort and stay,
And when the dark clouds gather
O'er him,
Her smile quickly drives them away.

In sorrow and anguish what comfort,
Comes from her watching and care,
No battle so fierce or no danger
To keep her away from him there.

She will stand by when all others forsake him,
And keep brave and true till the last,
And in life's darkest hour will comfort,
Until every temptation is past.

She will always be sweetheart and dearest,
Of any on earth he holds dear,
Her voice will always be sweetest
Of any he ever will hear.

At last when life's journey is ended,
By her side he will lie down to rest,
And in Heaven she will be with him,
Forever and even the blest.

Ask Hulmeville Council To Take Over Streets

biles became stuck in the deep mud, and merchants and physicians at times were unable to take their vehicles in the section. Residents at times were forced to park their machines on Main street or near the entrance to their own streets, and walk to and from their homes.

"The committee appointed by council last month, and the citizens' committee members have seen the borough solicitor and gone over the matter with him. We have gone into different points of legality, and furthermore have complied with all the borough solicitor has suggested. The petitions have been legally drawn, signed by practically all of the property holders involved, and we will within a few days secure the signatures of the four or five remaining," said one citizen. "We were informed by the borough solicitor that if we took this dedication petition to the property owners and had them sign it everything would then be done that we can do. Now we are asking that you as the borough council take these streets over."

After considerable discussion, routine business was gone into and the council adjourned to meet at the call of the chair. The special meeting to be called will be for the purpose of going into the street petition question further. Representatives of council and the citizens' committee will meet with the borough solicitor on Saturday in order to clear up any questions in the minds of either group.

Councilmen present last evening were: President Smith, Dicken, Buckman, Atter, Codling, Davis.

HERE IS THE RIDE THAT'S THE SMOOTHEST YET

HERE IS THE PERFORMANCE OF FLYING POWER

HERE IS THE STYLE LEADER OF THE YEAR . . .

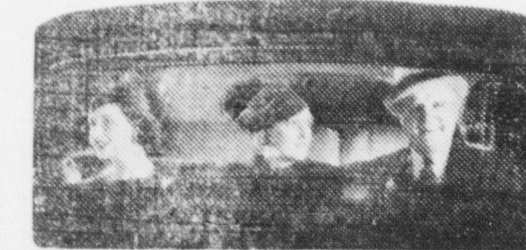

NASH FOR 1935

Spectacular as it is—Nash Performance is Only One of The Many Reasons Why We Ask You to Drive a Nash Before You Buy a New Car This Year.

● With absolute confidence, we make the statement that a Nash "ride" will eclipse any automobile ride you have ever had. It's like having "a new road under the wheels" wherever you drive. Synchronized springs does it—springs that flex evenly at all four wheels. Springs in which patented "Silentite" damper-leaves control friction. Springs that never need lubrication. Springs that never squeak. ● This even spring action, with car weight balanced 50-50 front and rear, means a level ride over the most un-level roads. No front-end jar or rear-end bounce so common to cars with unequal weight distribution and unequal spring action. ● And you ride in an all-steel one-piece body with safety front doors—hinged at the front. Six-passenger seating. Super-hydraulic brakes. An Automatic Cruising Gear—giving a big 102-horsepower car the economy of 18 to 22 miles per gallon of gasoline. Ball-bearing steering. Clutch-pedal starting. Large luggage space in the rear deck. Every convenience and comfort to make every mile of Nash travel extremely enjoyable.

● See and drive a Nash before you buy any car!

● The widest front seat in motordom—56 1/4 inches wide at shoulder level. Every Nash model is a real six-passenger model.
